

Board votes to keep Big Nine all 4A

When Big Nine principals and athletic directors gather to vote later this month or in early December on whether to make the conference a combined 3A/4A league, they'll get a clear message from the Walla Walla School board -- thanks, but no thanks.

School board members, per recommendation of Athletic Director Don Wilkins and Principal Brian Pendleton, voted unanimously last night to keep the Big Nine Conference an all 4A league.

The push to combine the league with both 3A and 4A schools came after the Washington Interscholastic Activities Association last April passed an amendment to change school classifications which are based on enrollment. The amendment attempts to create more equity by having schools with similar enrollment counts competing against each other.

Wilkins and Pendleton said a combined 3A/4A league would compromise the Big Nine conference and penalize the larger schools who would have to compete against lesser competition. Wilkins also said statements that a 3A/4A league would cut costs and travel time were inaccurate. The vote is expected in the coming weeks.

Staff prepare for next week's fall conferences

Assistant Superintendent Linda Boggs reported to school board members staff are working hard to prepare for next week's Parent/Teacher conferences. She said these are busy days for district teachers.

"Our teachers are anxious to share information with families," Boggs said. "These are high stress times for teachers. It takes a tremendous amount of work and energy to be prepared."

Structure key to Prospect Point behavior program

Staff members from the Prospect Point Behavior Program reported to school board members on the positive impact they are having on students in the program.

The program for students with severe behavior issues features two self-contained classrooms for students kindergarten through fifth grade. Each classroom supports five to six students annually.

Teacher Steve Droke said the most important feature of this behavior modification program is structure.

"Behavior must be taught," Droke said.

The district began a behavior program 14 years ago to better serve students with these special needs.

The district's program is based heavily on incentives. Students are able to earn credits for good behavior which allow them to get rewards.

Many of these students struggle with transitions, so many of the activities are reinforced with routine.

Staff members said forgiveness is also a key to the program's success.

Blue Ridge Millennials Program provides extra support

Blue Ridge Principal Connie Taylor Randall and Millennials 21st Century Grant Coordinator Erica Swingholm reported last night the program designed to provide additional support to students is making a difference at their school.

Now in year three of a five year grant, the Millennials program offers tutoring before and afterschool to help students improve their academic and social skills. Students participating in the program meet in the library, computer lab, cafeteria and gym. The Monday through Thursday program operates from 7 to 8 a.m. and 2:30 to 5:30 p.m.

Swingholm said they also started a lunch recess program featuring art activities and games to help students build relationships and have fun.

Students get up to 20 hours of extended school day per week. Transportation is also provided to help make the program stronger.

District Special Education WASL scores improve

Teaching and Learning Director Oscar Graybill reported last night on the significant improvement in district special education Washington Assessment of Student Learning (WASL) scores.

Graybill praised Special Education Coordinator Laura Droke and district special education teachers and support staff for the improvements. Graybill said the district's 795 special education students are making progress in all subject areas. He stressed the district takes them from their current academic level and helps them move forward.

He said Washington state changes coming this year to allow students to be tested according to their developmental level will spur further gains.
