

December 13 • School Board Meeting Recap

Board supports facilities improvement bond

School board members last night passed a resolution in support of a facilities improvement bond slated for Tuesday, May 16.

“This is an issue that has been studied in-depth for the past six years by local citizens, staff, school board members, parents, students, administrators, business leaders and independent consultants,” Superintendent Rich Carter said. “This is not a decision that was made without great discussion, thought and consideration by a number of parties over a long period of time.”

This proposed plan – which calls for replacement bond elections every six years while maintaining a flat rate of 99 cents in additional taxes over the 2005 bond rate throughout the span of the 25 years – is based on needs documented through local, regional and national studies.

Significant changes to state matching dollars formulas benefit this plan and would bring in $33,672,000 in the first bond alone.

The May 16, 2006 bond election addresses the district’s most urgent needs, which include: replacing Edison Elementary (current site), replacing Paine Alternative Campus (current site), moving our Support Services operations to the current Walla Walla High School Career and Technical Education building, and replacing and renovating Walla Walla High School. The 2006 bond also calls for additional dollars at all schools for yearly facility improvements, technology and security upgrades.

Funding summary (May 16, 2006 bond):

- $53,950,000 (Local)
 - $33,672,000 (State match dollars)
- Total – $ 87,622,000 (.99 cents per $1,000 in additional taxes above the 2005 bond rate.

Note: $8,000,000 is the estimated amount of the College Place contribution for high school improvements. This will eventually reduce the local responsibility to approximately $45,950,000)

Two district teachers earn National Board certification

Congratulations to Walla Walla High School English as a Second Language teacher Diana Erickson and Green Park Elementary 5th grade teacher Elissa Stites for earning this prestigious certification from the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards.

The path towards National Board certification is a year-long introspective process, one which includes creating of a portfolio of work that documents a teacher's success in the classroom. Candidates also complete a series of tests designed to measure their knowledge.

"We are proud of these outstanding educators and the effort they put in to earn this certification," Superintendent Rich Carter said. "We are fortunate to have this level of educator working with children in Walla Walla. I salute their efforts."

Richland schools to challenge "mini" WASLs

Superintendent Rich Carter informed the school board on the Richland School District board's intent to challenge the state of Washington and Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction (OSPI) in regard to use of the Washington Assessment of Student Learning (WASL) for grades 3, 5, 6 and 8.

These assessments or "mini WASLs" as some have termed, would be in addition to the reading, math and writing assessments administered to all 4, 7 and 10th graders in March and April. Students in grades 5, 8 and 10 are also tested in science.

The report last night was intended to be an information only item.

Carter explained that Richland's immediate intent is to have the state legislature approve legislation that would call for an independent examination of the WASL and also put a stop to adding more WASL tests.

Richland officials point out that the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLB) provides for flexibility and local control in assessment systems.

Per NCLB, a state's assessment system may include:

1. only statewide assessments
2. a combination of statewide and local assessments
3. only local assessments

Richland administrators and school board members also maintain that assessment tools should be simple to administer, inexpensive, and provide useful data to staff, students and parents. WASL results are not returned until early August following spring exams.

Walla Walla Public Schools board members expressed an interest to learn more about this issue and asked for additional information.
